"The trees planted through the project provided my bees with a rich nectar source. The bees have brought new life to this region, benefitting a lot of people, both Syrians and Jordanians".

Maan al Ghazawi, from the Jordan Valley, has been working in beekeeping for ten years. With EU support, and the expertise of FAO, Maan established beehives that boosted crop pollination and provided him with a sustainable income. His story highlights the power of community-based projects in fostering environmental love and economic resilience.

€2.2 billion
in Resilience assistance (including €1.08 billion in Macro-Financial Assistance)

The EU supports both vulnerable Jordanians and Syrian refugees by:

Assisting Jordan in mitigating the economic fallout of the crisis, ensuring that structural reforms foster growth and prosperity.

Supporting the delivery of social protection, improved education, health and water services to meet community needs.

Promoting durable solutions for Syrian refugees, including safe, voluntary and dignified return.
